

A clever way to store an inflatable dinghy

Dinghy Rings is a completely new way to hoist and store an inflatable dinghy at the stern of a pleasure boat. Simply place the rear ends of the dinghy's pontoons in the rings and erect the dinghy as the rings rotate.

The inflatable dinghies are more popular than ever. They are useful, means a lot of pleasure, but unfortunately too often inconvenient. Dinghy Rings solves the inflatable dinghy problems in harbour and while cruising.

Instead of lifting the dinghy aboard, deflating and inflating it or leaving it in the water, Dinghy Rings let you erect the dinghy in an easy way to an upright position. When standing, the dinghy can't be flooded, it takes almost no space, and even a small engine can be kept mounted under certain circumstances.

Unlike traditional davits, Dinghy Rings is discreet and affordable. When not in use, just remove the rings. Dinghy Rings is to be mounted underneath a swim platform, invisible when the rings are detached. It is available with a number of different mountings to fit power boats with wide external swim platforms and sailing yachts with narrow platforms. There's also a soft version of the arrangement, hung over the stern or bow of a boat and it's totally removable.

A smart davit for inflatable dinghies is great equipment and the construction and idea of Dinghy Rings is clever and scalable. It's made of the most appropriate material, AISI 316 stainless steel, and it's made in Sweden.

Dinghy Rings fits pleasure boats with an external swim platform or a flat stern and supports inflatable dinghies up to 50 kg or 3,5 meters. It's adjustable and can be adapted to most inflatables. Dinghies with non conical pontoons need's to attach an extra set of EVA-foam discs at the back of the pontoons to fit the rings.

Dinghy Rings is currently patented in Sweden and World-PCT pending. Two versions were introduced on the Swedish market in February 2016. In November 2016 two new models are released as Dinghy Rings is launched on the world market, at the same time nominated for DAME Design Award 2016. Dinghy Rings Sweden AB is searching for agents and retailers all over the world. We make yachting pleasant.
